Library Information Trophy (LIT)

We’re looking for projects that show sophisticated use of appropriate (academic and non-academic) information resources by students who have demonstrated growth in their information literacy skills (things like asking research questions, then locating, evaluating, synthesizing, and sharing new information) through completion of the project.

The Process:

When submitting an abstract, students indicate if they’d be interested in being considered for the prize.

- Two weeks before URAC, students submit their (nearly completed) poster/slides/paper.
- Faculty sponsors (your advisor or the professor whose class this project was for) complete an evaluation of the project and tell us what you learned through your research process.
- Faculty judges evaluate your project based on things like the focus of your research topic and the appropriateness and breadth of citations in your project and your professor’s evaluation.
- Winners are announced at URAC and win fabulous prizes.
